Foreword

The infringement of any child's rights is a tragedy. The fact that children's rights are still not enshrined in law in many countries, and that disreputable companies are profiting out of these infringements, is however even more shocking.

Customers, clients and consumers would be appalled to find goods that they have used were made at the expense of a child's wellbeing. Thankfully there is today a growing global consensus that business has a responsibility to respect human rights, and tools and insights developed by UNICEF, the UN Guiding Principles and GRI can all help protect children and transform businesses.

Evidence that the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights are taking hold can be seen in a number of promising initiatives. The updated Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), for example, now include a specific chapter on human rights that draws on the Guiding Principles. Furthermore, the content of the latest generation of GRI's Sustainability Reporting Guidelines – G4 – has been adapted to include many of the concepts outlined in the Guiding Principles, such as due diligence.

UNICEF's work to provide guidance for businesses that wish to report on how their practices respect and support children's rights should be applauded. Another very positive development is the creation of the Children's Rights and Business Principles, which provide a child rights perspective on the global standard on business and human rights established by the UN Guiding Principles.

GRI provides the most widely used global sustainability standard that enables companies to track and publicly disclose their sustainability impacts and performance, including on human rights issues – information that is increasingly of interest to investors, consumers, employees and other stakeholders. Reporting and disclosure on children's rights-related issues (beyond child labour) is significantly underdeveloped. This UNICEF publication will help businesses better understand how different disclosures and indicators in the GRI G3.1 and G4 Guidelines might be extended to integrate children's rights into sustainability measuring and reporting.

'Children's Rights in Sustainability Reporting' not only serves as a guide, but as an open invitation to all businesses everywhere to become aware of, address, and be transparent about their impacts on children's rights. GRI and UNICEF invite all companies to consider this resource as input in the preparation of their GRI sustainability reports and other public disclosure efforts.

GRI looks forward to future collaborations with UNICEF in this area and stands ready to support companies and other organizations in advancing their efforts in this important area of corporate responsibility.

Introduction

1.1 About this tool for companies

'Children's Rights in Sustainability Reporting' is designed as a practical tool to help companies with reporting and communicating on how they are respecting and supporting children's rights – through their policies, processes and operations in the workplace, marketplace and community. This tool is meant to be used in conjunction with other UNICEF tools for corporate social responsibility (CSR). The companion tools, 'Children's Rights in Impact Assessments'¹ and 'Children's Rights in Policies and Codes of Conduct'², provide companies with guidance on how to incorporate children's rights into a social or human rights impact assessment framework, as outlined in the United Nations Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights.

In 2011–2012, UNICEF commissioned a study by Elizabeth Umlas, on children's rights reporting. The study provided an overview of practices, identified major gaps and noted some areas for improvement. Overall, it concluded that 'reporting and disclosure on children's rights-related issues is, with a few exceptions, significantly underdeveloped.'³ The research and subsequent consultations with a variety of stakeholders provided the background for 'Children's Rights in Sustainability Reporting'.

The understanding of how to report on corporate impact on children's rights is in its early stages. Ultimately, the aim is to define robust indicators that will enable companies and others to measure and evaluate corporate performance. The formulation of indicators is a work in progress, and this tool does not seek to offer key performance indicators. Rather, it suggests examples of information which companies can report in relation to implementation of the Children's Rights and Business Principles.

This tool points readers to elements of the Global Reporting Initiative (GRI) Guidelines that can be used as the basis for reporting on children's rights.⁴ It aims to show companies how their reporting processes can and should be aligned with GRI and other frameworks such as the United Nations Global Compact's 'Communication on Progress' public disclosure commitment. It also offers guidance on child rights-specific reporting that goes beyond these frameworks.

1.2 Background on the Children's Rights and Business Principles

The Children's Rights and Business Principles (the Principles) provide a child rights lens to the global standard on business and human rights established by the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights for implementing the United Nations 'Protect, Respect and Remedy' Framework.⁵

Each Principle lays out actions that businesses can take in terms of their corporate responsibility to respect children's rights, as well as suggested actions to support children's rights in the workplace, marketplace and the community. In this way, the Principles aim to help businesses better understand their responsibilities towards children in a variety of contexts, including the employment of young workers, marketing practices, interaction with local communities and operation in emergency situations.

The Principles are founded on the rights outlined in the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which provides the underpinning for children's rights and recognizes the importance and interdependence of children's civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights.⁶ The Convention enshrines the rights of the child to be protected by States, and the Principles provide an operational framework for business to respect and support those rights.

The Principles are also founded on the International Labour Organization (ILO) Convention No. 182 on the worst forms of child labour and No. 138 on the minimum age for admission to employment and work.⁷ As outlined in Principle 1, a business should conduct human rights due diligence with reference to legal instruments – including the Convention on the Rights of the Child and its Optional Protocols, and ILO Conventions 138 and 182 – to identify how it impacts child rights.

The Children's Rights and Business Principles

The Children's Rights and Business Principles call on businesses to:

1. Meet their responsibility to respect children's rights and commit to supporting the human rights of children.
2. Contribute towards the elimination of child labour, including in all business activities and business relationships.
3. Provide decent work for young workers, parents and caregivers.
4. Ensure the protection and safety of children in all business activities and facilities.
5. Ensure that products and services are safe, and seek to support children's rights through them.
6. Use marketing and advertising that respect and support children's rights.
7. Respect and support children's rights in relation to the environment and to land acquisition and use.
8. Respect and support children's rights in security arrangements.
9. Help protect children affected by emergencies.
10. Reinforce community and government efforts to protect and fulfil children's rights.

1.3 Why report on children's rights?

For many companies, children are a priority stakeholder group. At the same time, they are often the most vulnerable population, requiring specific attention to guarantee respect for their human rights. The 'Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights' provide a broad framework through which companies can operationalize their respect for human rights, and they call on all businesses to pay particular attention to groups or populations that may be more vulnerable or marginalized.

It is possible that a business activity might not impact the rights of adults, but adversely impact the rights of a child. Moreover, companies should consider the positive and negative impacts they cause indirectly through suppliers, customers and other business partners, as well as their direct impacts on children's rights.

Children are both rights holders and stakeholders as companies interact with them on a daily basis as workers, consumers and community members. Despite this, children have not been adequately considered by business. The incorporation of children's rights into business policies and codes of conduct is often limited to child labour. Yet the impacts of business on children extend to such issues as product design and advertising, the behaviour of staff towards children, and children's rights in the supply and value chain.

⁶ The Convention on the Rights of the Child is available in Arabic, English, French and Spanish at UNICEF, www.unicef.org/crc.

1.4 How does this tool work?

'Children's Rights in Sustainability Reporting' offers guidance for companies on how to report on their implementation of the Children's Rights and Business Principles. It is aligned with the other UNICEF CSR tools, and aims to capture the relevant policy, due diligence and remedy elements to report on in the context of each Principle. This preliminary reporting guidance does not attempt to capture all relevant indicators. Rather, it provides suggestions about the topics companies should cover in order to demonstrate their progress in implementing the Principles.

The following section provides guidance notes for each of the Children's Rights and Business Principles, including examples of what to report on. The tables highlight relevant GRI disclosures, with annotations in italics that describe how the GRI disclosures might be extended to integrate children's rights into sustainability measuring and reporting.

Using the GRI Guidelines to report on children's rights

The GRI Guidelines offer a set of reporting principles and disclosures on a company's economic, environmental and social performance and impacts and its governance approach.

There are two types of GRI Reporting Principles: a set of four principles for defining the content of the report and a set of six principles for ensuring the quality of the information included in the report. The principles for defining report content are Materiality, Stakeholder Inclusiveness, Sustainability Context and Completeness⁸. The following examples provide a child rights lens to these GRI principles:

Materiality: What are the most important impacts that the company has on children's rights and well-being? This refers to the impacts that affect children as stakeholders, not simply to a company's bottom line.

Stakeholder Inclusiveness: Has the company consulted children and their legitimate representatives or advocates in identifying its potential or actual impacts on children?

Sustainability Context: Has the company considered contextual factors – such as the legal framework, prevalence of inadequate wages for adults, or institutionalized discrimination affecting girls – in places where it operates so that it is not reporting on isolated indicators or initiatives?

Completeness: Do the topics covered reflect significant impacts in a way that allows stakeholders to assess performance properly? Data, for example, should include results from all the company's sites and from entities, groups of entities, or elements outside of the company where significant impacts occur. 'Balance' is related to this and is a key GRI principle for defining report quality.⁹ Does the company report on both negative and positive aspects of performance? In relation to children's rights, compared to other areas of human rights impact, there may be a tendency for companies to report only on positive stories. But a report that ignores potential and actual negative impacts on children lacks credibility and tells readers little about how a company is dealing with the challenges it faces.

8 The GRI Principles for Defining Report Content are defined in the G4 Guidelines – Implementation Manual, pp. 9-13. The Implementation Manual also provides an explanation on how to apply the Principles and useful tests.

9 The other GRI Reporting Principles for Defining Report Quality are Clarity, Comparability, Accuracy, Timeliness and Reliability. These Principles are defined in the G4 Guidelines – Implementation Manual, pp.13-16. The Implementation Manual also provides an explanation on how to apply the Principles and useful tests.

There are two kinds of disclosures in the GRI G4 Guidelines:

1. General Standard Disclosures: these disclosures set the overall context for the report, providing a description of the company and its reporting process. They apply to all companies, regardless of their materiality assessment. There are seven types of General Standard Disclosures, ranging from the company's strategic perspective on addressing sustainability issues, and how it involves stakeholders in this process, to how it approaches key issues such as governance and ethics and integrity.

2. Specific Standard Disclosures: these are divided into two areas:

Disclosures on Management Approach (DMA): The DMA provide the company with an opportunity to explain how it is managing its material economic, environmental or social impacts, thus providing an overview of its approach to sustainability issues. The DMA focus on three things: describing why an Aspect (i.e., sustainability subject or issue) is material, how its impacts are being managed, and how the approach to managing this Aspect is being evaluated.

Indicators: Indicators allow companies to provide comparable information on their economic, environmental and social impacts and performance. Much of this is in the form of quantitative data. Companies are only required to provide Indicators on Aspects that they and their stakeholders have identified as material to the business. The GRI G4 Guidelines contains Indicators for a wide range of sustainability issues. For example, these could include water usage, health and safety, human rights or a company's impact on local communities.

The tables in the following section focus on the linkages between the Children's Rights and Business Principles and the General Standard Disclosures¹⁰ and the Indicators in the GRI G3.1 and G4 Guidelines. Companies should use the DMA¹¹ outlined in the GRI Guidelines to report how they manage children's rights related impacts with respect to any sustainability issue that they have identified as most important for the company and its stakeholders, such as health and safety, employment conditions, marketing and advertising practices, etc.

¹⁰ These type of disclosures are called 'Strategy and Profile' in the GRI G3.1 Guidelines.

¹¹ The Disclosures on Management Approach (DMA) can be found on pages 63-65 of the G4 Guidelines – Implementation Manual.

PART TWO

Elements of children's rights in sustainability reporting

2.1 Broad children's rights elements for all companies (Principle 1)

This section recommends overarching elements that are relevant to all companies, across all sectors, based on Principle 1.

Principle 1: Meet the responsibility to protect children's rights, and commit to supporting the human rights of children

Topics covered by the disclosures: Policy; due diligence; impact assessment; integration; performance monitoring and reporting; remediation

Examples of company information to report:

- Does the company have an explicit commitment to respect all human rights, including children's rights?
- Does the company have policies that include labour and non-labour child rights issues, as material in terms of the impacts experienced by children as affected rights holders?
- Does the company have supplier and other codes of conduct that include labour and non-labour child rights issues, as material in terms of the impacts experienced by children as affected rights holders?
- Does the company integrate children's rights considerations into human rights risk and impact assessments or other company risk and impact assessments, recognizing children as stakeholders?
- Based on the findings from risk and impact assessments, has the company committed to action plans to respect and support children's rights across relevant internal functions and processes with measurable targets and achievements?
- What kind of training and capacity-building programmes does the company undertake to integrate children's rights internally?
- Does the company have a framework in place to incorporate children's rights in its processes for supplier screening and business partner selection?
- How does the company communicate and report on its performance in relation to children's rights?
- What kind of operational-level grievance mechanisms are in place for child rights-related issues? Are these accessible to children, including young workers?

3.7 State any specific limitations on the scope or boundary of the report.

► Describe the identified material Aspects and Boundaries which relate to or cover elements of children's rights

GRI G4 Guidelines

GENERAL STANDARD DISCLOSURES:

Identified Material Aspects and Boundaries:

G4-18

- a. Explain the process for defining the report content and the Aspect Boundaries.
- b. Explain how the organization has implemented the Reporting Principles for Defining Report Content.

G4-19

- a. List all the material Aspects identified in the process for defining report content.

G4-20

- a. For each material Aspect, report the Aspect Boundary within the organization, as follows:
 - Report whether the Aspect is material within the organization
 - If the Aspect is not material for all entities within the organization (as described in G4-17), select one of the following two approaches and report either:
 - The list of entities or groups of entities included in G4-17 for which the Aspect is not material or
 - The list of entities or groups of entities included in G4-17 for which the Aspects is material
 - Report any specific limitation regarding the Aspect Boundary within the organization

G4-21

- a. For each material Aspect, report the Aspect Boundary outside the organization, as follows:
 - Report whether the Aspect is material outside of the organization
 - If the Aspect is material outside of the organization, identify the entities, groups of entities or elements for which the Aspect is material. In addition, describe the geographical location where the Aspect is material for the entities identified
 - Report any specific limitation regarding the Aspect Boundary outside the organization

G4-HR12 Number of grievances about human rights impacts filed, addressed, and resolved through formal grievance mechanisms

➤ Disaggregate to cover number of children's rights-related grievances filed, addressed and resolved through formal grievance mechanisms

2.2 Specific children's rights elements (Principles 2–10)

Each company will prioritize focus areas for children's rights based on its assessment of impact, materiality and stakeholder relationships. Implementation of Principles 2–10 should therefore be considered in the context of the specific company, its business sector and the local environment where it operates.

Depending on a company's impact on children's rights, the guidance specified for each Principle can be tailored and integrated under the GRI disclosures suggested in the tables. Prioritizing which disclosures to select for reporting on children's rights is most effectively based on two criteria:

1. For respecting children's rights – an evaluation of the severity of adverse impacts on children as rights holders, including gravity of impact, number of children impacted and whether the impact can be remediated. 'Severity' is defined in terms of the scale, scope and irremediable character of impacts; it is intended not as an absolute concept, but relative to any other human rights impacts the company has identified.
2. For supporting children's rights – an appraisal of opportunities to advance children's rights, aligned with core business competencies, such as products, services and influence.

Principle 2: Contribute towards the elimination of child labour

Topics covered by the disclosures: Minimum age for employment; addressing the root causes of child labour

Examples of company information to report:

- Does the company have a policy clearly stating the minimum age for employment? How is this policy communicated to relevant stakeholders?
- Describe any procedures the company has to verify age.
- Describe the processes and procedures that are in place for identifying and addressing any alleged cases of child labour within the company's direct operations or in the supply chain e.g. is there a formal grievance mechanism in place related to violations regarding the employment of children below minimum age?
- Has the company had incidents where it has hired children younger than 15 years old for full-time work (14 years old in certain developing countries) or the national minimum age for full-time work, whichever is higher? Describe how the company has dealt with these cases.
- Describe the steps taken to understand what constitutes an adequate living wage in the countries of operation.
- Describe any specific actions the company has taken to support broader efforts to eliminate child labour.

Principle 3: Provide decent work for young workers, parents and caregivers

Topics covered by the disclosures: labour standards for young workers; family-friendly workplace

Examples of company information to report:

- Does the company have a policy on providing decent employment terms and working conditions for young workers and student workers? This policy should be described and might include maintaining up-to-date records of all employees under age 18 and their tasks; guidelines defining tasks prohibited as hazardous to young workers; or appointing a manager to monitor the protection of young workers.
- Report health and safety statistics, such as the long-term injury frequency rate, disaggregated by age group, including young workers.
- Does the company have programmes to support young workers through targeted training or by promoting youth employment and skills development through apprenticeships? Describe.
- Does the company have policies in place that outline employees' rights to favourable working conditions, non-discrimination and adequate standards of living as relevant to families? Does the policy outline proactive measures for maternal health beyond legal compliance? Does it grant parental leave to both male and female employees for newborn, adopted and other dependent children?
- Does the company provide statutory sick pay, overtime pay and social contributions for all employees?
- Does the company offer flexible employment practices for workers with children? How many employees, male and female, use these flexible options?
- Where childcare services are unavailable, unaffordable or inadequate, does the company offer/support childcare services?
- Describe the company's efforts, if any, to address the issue of a living wage in countries of operation.
- Is there a formal grievance mechanism in place to address violations concerning young workers' rights, including students and vocational school workers?
